UNION CENTRAL COMMITTEE. FREMONT, May 24, 1867.

The Reconstruction Act. The long expected opinion of Attor ney General Stanberry upon the reconstruction Act has been published. The document is of great consequence, because all proceedings under the Reconstruction Act will, in the absence of any other authorative construction, conform to this opinion which becomes essentithe act. The opinion declares that under the original and the supplemental act, the qualifications prescribed are limited to the elections for delegates to the conventions, and to the elections whether the conventions shall be held or not; and that the whole question of disability is determined by the registration, there being no authority to change the registry. Those who are registered may vote; those who are not registered cannot vote. The registration itself must be closed by the first of September. As to who are entitled to be regstered, he decides that lack of one year's residence does not exclude from registration, though it will from voting at any election previous to the completion of the year of residence. The classes of persons who are disfranchised, and cannot lawfully take the oath of registration, may be thus stated:

1. Those who participated in the rebellion, and who before the war held office and had sworn allegiance to the United States. In this class he enumembers of the State Legislatures; the Governors, Lieutenant Governors, Autors, Treasurers and Secretaries of State; and all persons who, as executive or judicial officers of the State, had taken the oath to support the Constitution of the United States. All deserters from the army and navy of the United States are also disfranchised from voting and cannot lawfully take the oath.

The book is one which every ercising special duties as Commissioners of Boards of Public Works, Director of State Asylums and Penitentiaries Visitors of State Universities, and State Directors of Banks, are not disfranchis ed because of these offices from voting. and may take the oath.

2. All persons who, during the r bellion, acted in any official capacity where the duties of the office necessarily had relation to the rebellion, such as members of the rebel Congress and as members of the rebel Congress and rebel conventions, diplomatic agents of the Confederacy, and those other officers whose duties appertained more especially to the support of the rebel cause, are disfranchised. Officers in the rebel States who performed duties not incident to the war, but in the preservation of order and execution of the law, are not disfranchised.

Participation in the rebellion, contemplated by the act of Congress, is voluntary, and some overt act, beyond the expression of disloyal sentiments must have taken place to disqualify the person. Voluntary contributions in furtherance of the rebellion, subscriptions to the rebel loan, and organize contributions of food and clothing o supplies, except for sanitary purposes are to be classed as disqualifying acts.

The oath prescribed by the act is the only oath that can be administered. If the person take it, his name must go on the registry; the Board of Registers cannot inquire as to the truth or falsity of the oath. At elections the duty of the Board is to receive the votes of all persons registered, and to reject all oth-

This opinion of the Attorney General will admit to registration, and, consequently, voting, a very large number of persons who were generally supposed to have been disqualified by the Reconstruction Acts, but he has evidently construed these acts fairly, according to the rules of legal interpretation, and if

It is irtually the end of the war and the final overthrow of a villainous conspiracy against a people who have shown a ourage and patriotism through the long struggle, worthy of victory and freedom.

Disgusted.

The Richmond Enquirer, the most firey advocate of Secession and slavery before and during the war, and lately the most stubborn opponent of recon struction in the South, has itself been reconstructed, reduced in size and price and declares itself "tired of politics." It promises that its sole object hereafter shall be the "dissemination of news and "the promotion of the practical development of the resources of the State, and 'particularly of the city." Good resolution.

The Fenian Condemned.

The sentence of death passed on the ondemned Fenian prisoners in Ireland, for life. The English Government has for once shown itself wise and capable of an act of clemency, and its course will tend to allay the revolutionary fever in Ireland. The consistent and manly demeanor of the prisoners during the trial, has excited universal sympathy and admiration, and recalled to mind the Irisa patriots of former revolutions and the news of the commutation of their sentences will be welcomed everywhere in this country.
